Health care is advancing. The changing demands of a complex health care environment require the highest level of knowledge and expertise to ensure quality care.

The Doctor of Nursing Practice is a post master’s degree two-year program with a curriculum that allows students to continue working full-time.

The California State University’s faculty has a reputation for excellence in teaching, practice and professional service.

The California State University is the leader in innovative nursing programs.

California State University DNP programs require a master’s degree in nursing or a related health care field for admission. The programs are designed for students to:

- Perform doctoral-level applied research and develop advanced scientific knowledge and practice expertise to assure quality patient outcomes.
- Participate in a three-semester integrative doctoral project embedded in clinical practice.
- Work full-time; complete the required doctoral project within the work setting with permission of current employer.
- Prepare for a faculty role by completing an advanced educational degree and conducting clinical scholarship in the field of advanced practice nursing.

BENEFITS OF THE CSU’S DOCTOR OF NURSING PRACTICE:

- Model that enhances support for students;
- Close collaboration with diverse leaders to improve the health of Californians;
- Involvement in evidence-based research that directly impacts nursing practice and the community;
- Expertise and resources of the nation’s largest university system.

“The fact that this program is offered by a public university that serves a large body of students and diverse communities stands as an example for a progressive approach to health care.”
